

I don't want anyone calling me to sell me something, even if I've done business with them in the past. When I wish to buy a product, I will contact the company. As to cell phones, since I have to pay for the minutes I'm on the phone, even stricter rules should apply. Enough already. Companies have the right to be in business. They do NOT have the right to presume that an intrusion on my personal time is okay, no matter what the prior relationship may be.
